It's a fun game with a surprising increase in difficult the further you dive into the story. There are multiple timers that contribute to level challenge bonuses as well as in-game bonuses & power ups. Some mahjong games set up the tiles randomly, but this one obviously follows a type of algorithm where the game wont screw you on the first few steps, offering you a short grace period before you run into issues. (There's one puzzle I couldn't get more than 15% complete before having to use every power up I could, eventually resorting to using most of my crystals to completely refill the powerup bar.) As you progress through the storyline you'll find yourself needing to use these power ups more and more as the puzzles get more difficult. One of the power ups will reshuffle the board. There's a neat feature that allows you to remove a tile from the board and hold onto it to match later, but you have to match it before being able to pick up another one. There are hundreds of challenge puzzles available that don't affect the story portion of the game. Another portion of the game involves "boss fights" that play very similarly to games like Bejeweled or Pokemon Shuffle. The instructions for these games aren't explained very well, so it took a while for me to catch on. There are health orbs for yourself and the enemy. The bar next to the health bar shows which color orbs will give you "crystal energy" to attack. For the entirety of the first boss fight, I had to avoid matching purple orbs or I would get attacked. Each time I was able to attack, my color changed. The achievements are buggy right now but the game just came out so it should get fixed soon.. The best Mahjong game I've ever come across. The Mahjong Huntress embeds the classic tile matching game into a story, in which a young woman has to find out what happened to her fiancé. In order to progress through the story, the player has to solve the boards which unlock hints about the fate of the young man. Apart from simply cleaning the board of tiles, there are a number of objectives which contribute to the player's energy bar. Depending on its charge, the player is able to use certain powers which can put an already lost game back onto the path to success. Another nice feature is the combo system, which is basically a timer counting down a few seconds between each move, awarding more points if the player managed to match several tiles within the ever decreasing intervals. The difficulty of the boards is steadily increasing, forcing the player to sacrifice speed in favor of choosing the right tiles. Unwisely chosen matches will quickly force the player to sacrifice his energy for above mentioned special powers. But beware - once the energy is depleted, the player will have to start over with simpler boards to recharge the energy bar. In addition to the story mode there are more than 230 so called mystery boards, which are offering a wide range of tile layouts to choose from right from the start. The presentation is very nice, offering pleasant visuals along with a functional and intuitive user interface. If you were searching for a Mahjong game, you've just found it. Especially with the very low price tag attached there is absolutely no reason not to recommend it. Info: The Mahjong Huntress runs very smoothly under Linux as well. I've encountered no problems on my 64Bit-Ubuntu Linux configuration. UPDATE: So far I've encountered only a few bugs. Some minor graphic glitches, some spelling errors. Worst bug was a game crash after the boss fight in the mausoleum. After restarting, I couldn't progress because the game didn't open chapter 3 for me. I had to create a new player profile and start over.. It's a joke. How am I supposed to beat "Mahjong Huntress" or even progress when I'm stuck? I'm stuck at level 8 and have replayed it more than a dozen times but can't beat it. The stones always lie so badly that sooner or later the possible pairs are gone and it's "Game Over". Also I'm out of power ups (or power up juice) because I had to use them before to get that far. And don't get me wrong: I'm not a beginner in Mahjong: I've played it a lot, it's one of my favourite puzzle games and time wasters. So I notice which pairs are good to remove at one moment and which ones aren't. And it's not even like I can buy powerups or other helpful elements (micro transactions) to get further. Not that I miss that but I'm very surprised, though. So: No, look for other Mahjong titles. This one is pretty much broken, designed badly and not fun. Last but not least: The story. Yes, there's a story around all the levels about a young British lady (you) trying to solve a mystery of her disappeared fiancé. She doesn't love this future husband but must find him or else she and her family get suspected and have to live in shame. Now if that's not motivating enough to get through this broken game, I don't know. My guess is that her fiancé got stuck pub getting wasted just like how I got stuck in the game. I don't care anymore.. It's a good game but it has bugs that prevent you progressing. Until they are fixed there's no point playing it.. As an experienced jong player I picked this game up on sale for a few bucks. Its got a sherlock holmes esque storyline to it that you must solve some jong puzzles to solve it. Not bad for a few dollars to kill some time and play some jong.. It's a good game but it has bugs that prevent you progressing. Until they are fixed there's no point playing it.. Mahjong itself isn't even well programmed, because often times, various puzzles were impossible to solve
